

COLA Weekly

OCTOBER 19, 2018

Mark your calendars for two COLA Talks next week.

Panel on the Midterm Elections: How Will This Election Affect You?, is set for Tuesday, October 23, 3:30 – 5:00 p.m. in Fawcett 101. Sponsored by SPIA and the departments of history and religion, philosophy, and classics, this panel will feature Lee Hannah, Edward Fitzgerald, Mandy Shannon, and Jonathan Winkler.

The Moral Injury of War: A Conversation with David Wood, will take place Friday, October 26, 1:30-3:00 p.m. in Schuster Hall. Award-winning journalist David Wood will be joined by Wright State University student-veterans Loghan Young, David Berry, and Ericka Carter. Moderating the conversation will be military historian Jonathan Winkler.

Congratulations to In-Hong Cha, music, for receiving two 2018 Pepsi Music Awards in Venezuela. In-Hong and the Symphony Orchestra of Venezuela received Best Classical Album of the Year and Best Classical Artist of the Year at a gala last month in Caracas.

This spring, we are introducing a new course, Ceramics for Non-Majors, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, 1:00-3:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Building. Students will have the opportunity to build, glaze, and fire original works of art and develop a broad range of skills including functional and sculptural hand-building techniques. This class is for all skill levels, from beginners to more experienced students. Please spread the word!

The College of Sciences and Mathematics is hosting Innovation Weekend in the Student Success Center on November 2-4. This event aims to address a long-standing problem of significance in both the military and public sectors and allows students to work with one another to come up with solutions that can be pitched to regional experts. Participants from a variety of backgrounds are encouraged to attend, so please share this information with your students.

This week's featured DSAB member is Leah Dryden. Leah is a second-year student majoring in English with a minor in political science. She is involved in multiple organizations, such as the SGA and College Democrats, and serves as the vice president of leadership development for Alpha Phi Omega. Leah is passionate about politics and loves animals, traveling, and reading. She is working towards a career in political journalism or working in university education.
