

Dr. Melissa Doran is a Wright State alumni, and current Instructor in our Department of Modern Languages, who graduated this past year from The Ohio State University with her Ph.D. in Hispanic Literatures and Languages. Her research interests cover contemporary Spain and contemporary Latin America, particularly the interplay between history and fiction, as well as topics such as biopolitics, state-sponsored violence, and the contemporary novel. Her dissertation, entitled “(De)Humanizing Narratives of Terrorism in Spain and Peru”, examines humanizing and dehumanizing narratives within Spanish and Peruvian literary and filmic works that deal with political conflicts in those countries. She discussed some of those elements as she analyzed the representation of the figure of the terrorist in films from Spain and Peru.
